

OXFORD ARCHAEOLOGY

Oxford Archaeology is the largest independent archaeological practice in Europe. Since our foundation in 1973, we have worked throughout the UK and on many international projects. We are a registered Educational Charity.

OXFORD ARCHAEOLOGY NORTH

LANCASTER OFFICE

GIS SPECIALIST

We are wishing to appoint a skilled and experienced GIS Specialist to work at our Lancaster office.

This is your opportunity to join Oxford Archaeology's growing team of GIS specialists, working on exciting large and small scale GIS projects, and developing GIS protocols and software for use in professional archaeology and the heritage industry.

A degree in archaeology, archaeological computing, or a related subject, is desirable. Experience of particular software packages is not essential, but you must have a thorough understanding of, and interest in, the principles and techniques of GIS and databases for data collection, manipulation and interrogation/analysis.

The successful candidate will be conversant in data standards and guidelines as applied to archaeological and geospatial data collection, storage and use, will be interested in the development of geospatial solutions (web-based and desk-based) and will be committed to Oxford Archaeology's policy of open access to data and open standards.

Membership of the Institute of Field Archaeologists (IFA), or the British Computing Society is desirable, and required for progression within the company, as is a clean driving licence.

SALARY RANGE: £15,671 - £17,096 pa (Supervisor level)

£17,544 - £21,340 pa (Project Officer level)

Appointment level depending on qualifications and experience.

We can offer

- ✓ the prospect of long term employment
- ✓ competitive salary and benefits
- ✓ training to maintain and develop skills and
- ✓ the opportunity to be involved in some of the most exciting and worthwhile archaeological projects in Britain and abroad.
